

Chapter 1. Introduction

1

We need:

An objective function, a single-valued function of performance, which is a function of unknowns or variables, over which to optimize. We also may need to consider constraints on the variables.

Modeling: identifying the objective, variables, constraints, for a given problem.

An optimization algorithm (from many choices), may be used to compute a solution, depending on the objective function.